The Collateral Consequences of a Felony Criminal Record in Missouri

The consequences of a criminal record—such as experiencing poverty, being unhoused, lacking formal employment or education—often also mirror the pre-conditions of someone becoming arrested and/or incarcerated; in other words, these factors and experiences can serve as both the impetus for and consequence of someone landing in the criminal legal system. Therefore, for many MSPD clients, their lives pre-incarceration informs how their lives may proceed post-incarceration, often in a manner that exacerbates the risk factors that increase the likelihood of further criminal legal system involvement. This perpetuates the cycle of poverty and incarceration for thousands of Missourians every year, with state and federal laws cutting off a slew of opportunities and experiences for Missourians with criminal records. And these consequences do not only affect the person with an arrest history or criminal record, but their family and community members, too; collateral consequences wind up levying intergenerational consequences, as parents with criminal records are unable to access social supports or participate in various aspects of social and political life that would otherwise mitigate the odds of their children experiencing poverty, family separation, interpersonal violence, and criminal legal system involvement.

Disclaimer: The following are collateral consequences of having a felony record in the state of Missouri. These consequences are the result of convictions as well as pleas. This list is ever-changing, and therefore, specific consequences should be verified to ensure the most accurate and up to date information. This guide is being provided for informational purposes only and should not be considered legal advice.

Compromised Economic/Financial Well-Being

A felony criminal record renders someone ineligible for many poverty-alleviation programs and social supports. For example, Missouri pauses Social Security Disability and Supplemental Security Income payments during an incarceration period that exceeds 30 days; if the incarceration period exceeds a year, then the state terminates them, which results in the individual having to navigate the re-application process following their release.

Economic-related collateral consequences also include being ineligible for various loans, such as loans related to housing/property and business/entrepreneurial endeavors.

Lastly, the fees related to criminal legal system involvement—such as fees related to representation, digital monitoring services, and restitution—result in insurmountable legal system debt. Ironically, an inability to pay off certain legal system debts can result in someone’s re-incarceration.

Limited Employment Opportunities

9 in 10 employers screen for an applicant’s criminal history during the job application process, which often results in applicants with criminal records being passed over for stable, secure jobs. Indeed, people with criminal records are overrepresented in the unemployed population: For example, nearly two-thirds of unemployed men in their 30s have a criminal record. An inability to find employment feeds into the other collateral consequences (e.g., financial well-being, housing insecurity, family separation) discussed throughout this document.

Additionally, having a felony criminal record makes someone ineligible for various industries, such as in the education system, banking, health care, and government. Licensure restrictions for people with felony criminal records also create barriers to employment as individuals are ineligible to obtain the certificates/licenses they may require in certain industries, such as trucking and transportation.

Limited Educational Opportunities

Having a felony criminal record bars prospective students of higher education from accessing various scholarships, loans, and other forms of educational financial assistance. In particular, the eligibility criteria home in on two clusters of criminal records: those related to drugs and substance use, and those related to fraud, dishonesty, misrepresentation, and money-laundering.

Further, Missouri has zero protections against discrimination for those with criminal records during the college admissions process. Both public and private universities in Missouri can deny admission to any applicant and cite the applicant’s criminal history as a valid reason for doing so.

Housing Insecurity

Public housing authorities often deny housing to applicants with criminal records and arrest histories—despite the federal government’s urging for PHAs to look beyond those to make affordable housing more accessible for a group with otherwise limited options for housing. Indeed, people with criminal records are ten times more likely than the general population to experience homelessness, in large part due to restrictive criteria imposed by housing agencies and landlords concerning tenancy eligibility.

Eligibility for residency in government-operated homes (such as for veterans), long-term care facilities, and senior living facilities often excludes those with criminal records, especially ones that concern drug offenses and sex offenses.

Landlords and housing agencies often require that all occupants submit to a background screening; this can have the indirect result of families separating so that members without criminal records are able to secure housing that they would otherwise be barred from due to another family member's criminal history. Some families may also avoid disclosing if someone in the home has a criminal record, which can result in the entire family facing eviction if the landlord finds out.

Limited Civic Rights

A felony permanently bars someone from being able to sit on any jury in Missouri.

Special Notes:

Drug-specific collateral consequences: Drug-convictions paradoxically make it harder for someone who may have a substance use disorder to access treatment/recovery services. Additionally, due to the War on Drugs, there are many legal restrictions that apply primarily to drug convictions. For example, Missouri is one of only seven states that outright bans TANF for individuals with certain drug convictions. Missouri also has a modified ban on SNAP for people with felony drug convictions: Only individuals with three or fewer drug-related felony convictions are eligible for SNAP.

The role of race in the collateral consequences of a criminal record: Given that the United States has not merely a mass incarceration issue, but a mass incarceration of disproportionately Black, Indigenous, and other People of Color issue, there are racial implications concerning the collateral consequences of a criminal record. Disparities in arrest and sentencing practices result in Black and Brown individuals having increased contact with the criminal legal system and receiving harsher sentences than white individuals. Given the abovementioned collateral consequences of a felony criminal record, it is unsurprising how the criminal legal system plays a role in widening the wealth and income gap between communities of color and white communities as communities of color are shut out from opportunities that would secure their financial, educational, social, and medical well-being. Black and Brown individuals wind up bearing the brunt of discriminatory policies and attitudes toward those with criminal records.

The undercurrent of trauma: People with trauma histories are overrepresented in the incarcerated population and amongst those with criminal records. Incarceration itself is a traumatic event that causes additional harm with little to no adequate mental health supports in jails and prisons to help people. This can result in people resuming activities and coping mechanisms that increase the risk of recidivism (or even death) following their release from prison.
